

For Building Resilient and Sustainable Agriculture and Food Systems
— Contribution by Food Sectors in the Food Supply Chain —

In order to build the resilient and sustainable agriculture and food systems, it is necessary to take sustainability-oriented approaches at the farming stage and the other stages of the food supply chains such as maintaining/recovering natural capital through climate mitigation and adaptation and biodiversity conservation, and to make efforts to respect for human rights. It is also necessary for us to create an environment where consumers appreciate, purchase, and support such initiatives and products.

The impetus to create this environment lies in the food industry which connects farmers with consumers by manufacturing, distributing and retailing. It is vital for us to promote understanding and collaborative initiatives among stakeholders from production to consumption.

This seminar introduces the collaborative initiatives of major food companies with agricultural production sites, and initiatives by the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) of the United Nations in collaboration with the private sector for supporting small-scale farmers in developing countries related to sustainable agricultural production, followed by the discussion among participants on further collaboration towards resilient and sustainable agriculture and food systems.
