

Japan's Contribution to the 1.5°C Goal through Innovation of Food Systems : A New Horizon towards COP30

19th Nov. 17:30 - 19:00 (Baku Time) @Japan Pavilion

As emphasized in the 2019 IPCC special report, addressing climate change is a critical component in achieving global food security. Their interconnection drawing more attention than ever, heightened at the “Food, Agriculture and Water Day” at the COP29. With this, various R&D and innovations have been developed regarding food and agriculture. Many of them are in their actual implementation phase - how to tailor those results with actual needs is our common challenge we face. Based on that recognition, this seminar sheds light on the potential contribution from the food systems to the 1.5°C target, by sharing R&D outcomes and experiences from Japan and other countries, aiming at encourage further -climate actions by relevant stakeholders toward COP30 next year.
